

sent to both Universities, and for a time misled the learned, who did not immediately discover them to be a mere invention to aid her imposture. —

Characters made by an ingenious Impostor, who called herself Sadia, she personated an Indian Prince, and succeeded in imposing on the credulity of several persons of the highest respectability — Resigning of these characters (which she by signs represented to be those of her native country) were

